Every crack and crevice of the Buick was littered with vermin nests. A full pressure washing would be required before any work could begin. The owner, who bought the car new in '87, apparently retired the Grand National from daily driver duty four years later, replacing it with a then brand new 1991 Mustang GT.

From 1984-'86, Buick produced 9,614 Grand Nationals, and by 1987—the final year of production—demand was so high that Buick buiil 20,194 examples to satisfy its customers. To give the Grand National a fitting farewell, Dave Sharpe, Buick's chief engineer, petitioned senior management to allow the creation of a "super Grand National," and thus the GNX was born.

Overall, Buick Regals won 22 of the 32 Grand National races that year. To capitalize on these successes, Buick introduced a limited-edition Regal "Grand National" model for the 1982 model year. The old saying, "Win on Sunday, Sell on Monday" was still very much at work and these first examples of a waking legend – while among the rarest – were rather haphazard in production.
